

Report of Community Service Event at Crispus Attucks Medical Magnet High School

Dr. Millicent Moye was approached by Sherri Sebree, an employee at the Crispus Attucks Medical Magnet High School, about having five members and affiliates of the Aesculapian Medical Society to volunteer to serve on a 5-member panel for a lyceum planned for Wednesday, February 16 at 9:00 a.m. until 10:00 a.m., as part of the school's Black History month. This particular event was an opportunity for students to ask and get answers to medical related questions from established medical professionals. As many of you know, Crispus Attucks has a rich African American history. Additionally, it has a student body currently that is 90% African American. Exposing students to minority physicians is extremely important and paramount, according to Mrs. Sebree.

According to Dr. Moye, the volunteers (see list below) had a great time. Everyone met at the school and was escorted to the Auditorium where students were allowed to ask questions of the panel. The questions were varied in nature and ranged from why everyone became physicians to what was the scariest situation they ever had. "I think this is something we should continue to do as a group and have involvement of different specialties each time, if possible." said Dr. Moye. "I believed we all had a great time and sincerely hoped that students were able to gain some insight about what we do as physicians."

Warrick Barrett, MD, Emergency Medicine - warrickbarrett@hotmail.com

Joye Carter, MD, Pathologist - JandMForensics@aol.com

Denise Johnson Miller, Surgeon (Breast Cancer Specialist), recently named America's Top Doc - DENISE.JOHNSONMILLER@ssfhs.org

Theresa Rohr-Kirchgraber, MD Adolescent Medicine - trohrkir@clarian.org

Millicent Moye, MD, Family Medicine

Not-pictured Toya Corbitt Perry, MD, Pediatrician - tperry531@sbcglobal.net